

Clay Fink is a senior software engineer at the Johns Hopkins University Applied Physics Laboratory. He obtained a B.S. in Computer Science from the University of Kentucky and an M.S. in Computer Science from the Johns Hopkins University. His research interests are in developing approaches for analyzing online user generated content for understanding psychological, social and cultural phenomena. He is currently the principal investigator for the ONR funded grant “Evaluating Social Media as a Source of Public Opinion in the Developing World.”